

The German and the Nordic Section of ERSa jointly organize the Summer Conference “Regional transformation: labor, skills, and resilience” in Schwerin (Germany) on June 15-17, 2022

Call for Submission

The demographic transition, digitalization, macroeconomic volatility, and not at least the Covid-19 pandemic shape regional economies and labor markets by generating positive and negative shocks as well as requiring individuals and firms to adapt. At the individual level, rising uncertainties have changed expected labor market outcomes and at the aggregate level, regional transformation processes are widely observed and reshape the geography of economies. However, it is not yet clear whether such changes in local economies translate into resilience or rigidity and to what extent they translate into new growth potentials. The conference aims to unfold and discuss ongoing research focusing on the aspects of regional transformation.

We aim to bring together researchers who work on these issues to discuss papers and exchange ideas. We welcome both theoretical and empirical submissions related (but not limited) to the following topics with a regional focus:

- Labor market research,
- Emergent human capital and skill transformation,
- Firm and individual behavior,
- Demographic aspects and migration,
- Regional transformation and development,
- Short- and long-run aspects of the Covid-19 pandemic,
- Technological change and digitalization,
- Borders and bordering,
- The EU Cohesion policy and its impact in the Nordic countries,
- Place branding and regional development,
- Culture, restaurants and leisure industries,
- Regional development in sparsely populated regions.

The conference is jointly organized by the German and the Nordic Sections of ERSA. The conference will host two keynote speakers and individual paper sessions. All papers will be assigned a discussant and all presenters/participants are expected to serve as discussants. We aim to encourage constructive discussions in an interactive setting.
